Columbia, and of J. Sterling Morton, former Secretary of Agriculture and founder of Arbor Day.

The principal address will be by Edwin T. Meredith, Secretary of Agriculture. The tree will be presented by Col. C. W. Kutz, Engineering Commissioner, and accepted by Dr. S. M. Huddleston, chairman of the forestry committee. It will be dedicated by Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, president of the federation.

The chairman of conservation, and the presidents of each of the twenty-eight clubs will put a spadeful of earth around the tree. Boy scouts will assist in the ceremonies and Mrs. J. H. Cunningham will be musical director.

Wednesday morning will be devoted to reports of club presidents. Election of officers will be held Wednesday afternoon.

How he met Jules W. (Nicky) Arnshein, the much-sought, alleged "enter mind" in the $50,000 bond thefts, at the New Willard Hotel here, and received from him $45,000 of the stolen securities was told by David W. Sullivan, former Washington-Longbecker and broker in a confession made in New York city.

In secret hearing conducted by United States Commissioner Giehrst Sullivan admitted he had received a total of $600,000 of the stolen securities from Arnshein and Nicholas Cohen and also implicated several other men, including Wyland W. Easterday, a former Washington stock broker.

Sullivan, who was the head of the now defunct brokerage firm of David W. Sullivan & Co., declared his firm was in a financial hole when he and Easterday began negotiations with Arnshein and Cohen for the stolen securities. He said the two New Yorkers received $125,000 as "commission" for the $600,000 securities, and the loot then had been disposed of for approximately one-half of its value.

October 11, 1919, Sullivan said, he had his first meeting with Arnshein and Cohen in the bar of the Breton Hotel, New York city, and arranged to meet the latter in Washington three days afterward.

The meeting took place and Cohen turned over $45,000 worth of securities on which was obtained a loan of $20,000 from the Riggs National Bank.

Washington. He later met Cohen and turned over $100,000 to him to be split fifty-fifty with Arnshein as agreed upon at the first meeting.

Cohen and Arnshein, Sullivan said, had been frequently afterward in Washington, Baltimore, Boston, Hoboken and Philadelphia, where more stolen securities were turned over and put up as collateral in different banks, making a total of about $600,000.

Easterday, according to Sullivan, arranged the meeting between Sullivan, Arnshein and Cohen.

Several weeks after opening the Washington office, Sullivan testified, he had been called to New York from time to time from Norman S. Bowles, Washington. By June, 1919, Sullivan testified, he owed Bowles $10,000.

Bowles later became the office of Sullivan & Co. member in the Consolidated Stock Exchange, New York.

Easterday, according to Sullivan, took charge of the Wall Street office of the firm and ran the day's business. Sullivan said, soon found himself in deep water and he and Easterday went to Washington to discuss its affairs with Bowles, who remained in Washington in charge of the office.

Sullivan said, he and Easterday were in Washington, the latter informed him that Randolph M. Newman, a lawyer who shared the office of Sullivan & Co. member in the Consolidated Stock Exchange, New York.
